ANCHOR LEDE

It's a question moms-to-be ask all the time: Is this or that food safe for me and baby?

On today's menu: Onions. Experts say they're OK for newborns if you prepare and serve them properly.

Tim Ditman of OSF HealthCare has more.

Give the baby small, soft pieces, says Xandra Anderson, a lactation consultant at OSF.

Wash raw onion to remove bacteria. And watch for symptoms like bloating, gas, diarrhea, fussiness or a rash. If so, take onions out of the baby's diet.

Anderson adds that green onions can help with teething.
